Key Witnesses Testify At Sandusky Trial

Assistant coach, teen who triggered grand jury probe take stand

Bellefonte, Pa.

A former Penn State assistant coach who was a central figure in Joe Paterno's downfall testified Tuesday that he heard a "skin-on-skin smacking sound" in a campus locker room one night in 2001 and saw something that was "more than my brain could handle."

Jerry Sandusky was standing naked in the showers behind a boy, slowly moving his hips, Mike McQueary told the jury.

Testifying on Day 2 of Sandusky's trial, McQueary, one of the star witnesses in the child sexual abuse case against Sandusky, said he had no doubt he was witnessing anal sex. He testified that he slammed his locker shut loudly as if to say, "Someone's here! Break it up!"

Penn State University assistant football coach Mike McQueary leaves Tuesday after testifying at the child sexual abuse trial of Jerry Sandusky in Bellefonte, Pa.

Missing Links

The identity of the boy who former Penn State University assistant football coach Mike McQueary said he saw in the shower with Jerry Sandusky is a mystery to prosecutors. Two of the 10 alleged victims have yet to be located or even identified. (AP)

Then, he said, he went upstairs to his office to try to make sense of what he had seen.

Sandusky, 68, is on trial on charges he molested 10 boys over a 15-year period. The former assistant coach and founder of an acclaimed youth charity has denied the allegations.

Earlier Tuesday, the teenager who triggered the grand jury investigation that rocked Penn State became the second of the alleged victims to take the stand.

Choking back tears, he said that Sandusky kissed him, fondled him and engaged in oral sex with him during sleepovers in the basement of Sandusky's home while the coach's wife was upstairs.

The accuser, labeled "Victim No. 1" by a grand jury, said he eventually confided in a school district guidance counselor, only to be told by school officials: "[Sandusky] has a heart of gold, and he wouldn't do something like that."

School officials ultimately referred the case to the county's child-welfare agency, which found his account credible.

Sandusky didn't visibly react to the teen's account and looked straight ahead during his testimony. GENARO C. ARMAS AND MARK SCOLFORD (AP)

Teen Summer Jobs Disappearing

More than 7 in 10 unemployed partly due to cultural shift

Washington

Once a rite of passage to adulthood, summer jobs for teens are disappearing.

Fewer than three in 10 American teenagers now hold jobs such as running cash registers, mowing lawns or busing restaurant tables from June to August. The decline has been particularly sharp since 2000, with employment for 16-to-19-year olds falling to the lowest level since World War II.

And teen employment may never return to pre-recession levels, suggests a projection by the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics.

The drop in teen employment, steeper than for other age groups, is partly a cultural shift. More youths are spending summer months in

Income Gaps

Economists say teens who aren't getting jobs are often those who could use them the most. Many are not moving on to more education. "I have big concerns about this generation of young people," said Harry Holzer, labor economist and public policy professor at Georgetown University. He said the income gap between rich and poor is exacerbated when lower-income youths who are less likely to enroll in college are unable to get skills and training. According to government projections, the teens entering the U.S. labor force are expected to decline another 8 percentage points by 2020. (AP) school, at music or learning camps or in other activities geared for college. But the decline is especially troubling for teens for whom college may be out of reach.

Older workers, immigrants and debt-laden college graduates are taking away lower-skill work as they struggle to find their own jobs in the weak economy. Upper-income white teens are three times as likely to have summer jobs as poor black teens, sometimes capitalizing on their parents' social networks for help.

Overall, more than 44 percent of teens who want summer jobs don't get them or work fewer hours than they prefer.

"We're seeing a cultural change. Parents used to tell their kids, go to the retail store or gas station and find a job in the summer, but it's not happening as much anymore," said John A. Challenger, CEO of Challenger, Gray & Christmas. "The question is where teen employment has bottomed out. Have we reached that limit? I don't know," he said. HOPE YEN (AP)

Commerce Secretary on Leave

Washington

The White House said Tuesday there was no timetable for Commerce Secretary John Bryson's return from medical leave after the cabinet member suffered a seizure connected to two traffic accidents Saturday.

Bryson, a 68-year-old former utility executive, informed the White House Monday that he was taking a medical leave of absence to undergo tests. He did not specify how long he would remain on leave but said he would not perform the functions and duties of the office "during the period of my illness."

As secretary, Bryson is a member of the president's economic team and has advised on energy issues. Deputy Secretary Rebecca Blank was named acting head of the Commerce Department in Bryson's absence, and the White House said she had the president's confidence.

Investigators are awaiting a blood test to determine whether Bryson was under the influence while driving in the Los Angeles area. The test results could come back as early as Wednesday.

"If it comes back clean, it's highly unlikely there will be criminal implications," said Steve Whitmore, a spokesman with the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department. (AP)

GOP, Holder Clash Over Security Leaks Probe

Republicans demand that attorney general use outside counsel

Washington

Attorney General Eric Holder on Tuesday fended off Republican demands that he appoint a special counsel outside of the Justice Department to look into national security leaks.

Holder said both he and FBI Director Robert Mueller have already been interviewed by the FBI as part of a fast-moving Justice Department leak investigation.

At a Senate Judiciary Committee hearing, Sens. Lindsey Graham, R-S.C., and Chuck Grassley, R-Iowa, said they want the attorney general to appoint a special counsel to look into the leaks, rather than Holder's choices, U.S. Attorneys Ron Machen and Rod Rosenstein, who hold political appointments.

Holder praised the two U.S. attorneys as experienced and highly respected.

U.S.: Russia Sells Arms to Assad

Attack helicopters signal escalation in Syria, officials say

Washington

Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton accused Russia on Tuesday of selling attack helicopters to the Syrian government, asserting that Moscow was lying about the lethal support it provides to Syrian President Bashar al-Assad.

In an unusually direct rebuke, Clinton dismissed as "patently untrue" Russian claims that it is no longer providing the weapons used in Assad's brutal assault against the country's 15-month-old uprising.

Meanwhile ...

Angry crowds blocked U.N. observers from reaching an embattled rebel-held town in Syria on Tuesday, hurling stones and metal rods at the monitors' vehicles. The vehicles came under fire as they drove away from Haffa, but the source of the gunfire was not clear, the U.N. said. None of the observers was injured. The situation in Haffa has raised alarm over the past eight days, and the U.S. said Monday that regime forces may be preparing a massacre there. (AP)

Clinton also said that the shipment "will escalate the conflict quite dramatically."

Clinton's comments at a public appearance with Israeli President Shimon Peres augured poorly for a peaceful solution to Syria's conflict. Officials from around the world are warning that the violence risks becoming an all-out civil war that could draw in other

Middle East nations.

Diplomatic hopes have rested on Washington and Moscow agreeing on a transition plan that would end the 40-year Assad regime.

But Moscow has consistently rejected the use of outside forces to end the conflict or any international plan to force regime change in Damascus.

With diplomacy at a standstill, the reported shipment of helicopters suggests a dangerous new turn for Syria after more than a year of harsh government crackdowns on mainly peaceful protests and the emergence of an increasingly organized armed insurgency.

Russia and Syria have a long-standing military relationship and Syria hosts Russia's only naval base on the Mediterranean Sea. But in light of the brutal violence, the U.S. has repeatedly demanded an end to further deliveries of weaponry. Russian military support in the form of attack helicopters would deal a blow to efforts to starve the Syrian army of supplies.

There was no immediate reaction from the Russian Foreign Ministry. (THE WASHINGTON POST/AP)

Pakistan: Envoy Sent U.S. Memo

Islamabad

A three-member judicial commission on Tuesday concluded that Husain Haqqani, Pakistan's former ambassador to the U.S., was behind a memo indirectly sent to a U.S. military official last year seeking Washington's help in averting a military coup, which set off a political firestorm in Pakistan.

The report, submitted to Pakistan's Supreme Court for review, found Haqqani was "not loyal" to Pakistan while serving as its ambassador and sought to undermine the country's nuclear assets, military and intelligence agency. He could face treason charges.

The commission's report marks the latest turn in the tailspin of U.S.-Pakistani relations over the past year, and in the strife between Pakistan's civilian government and its military and intelligence service. (THE WASHINGTON POST)

Coroner: Dingo Killed Baby in '80

4th inquest clears parents in case that captivated Australia

Canberra, Australia

The dingo really did take the baby.

Thirty-two years after a 9-week-old infant vanished from an Outback campsite in a case that bitterly divided Australians and inspired a Meryl Streep film, the nation overwhelmingly welcomed a ruling that finally closed the mystery.

A coroner in Darwin concluded Tuesday that a dingo, or wild dog, had attacked and taken Azaria Chamberlain from her parents' tent near Ayers Rock, the red monolith in the Australian desert now known by its Aboriginal name Uluru.

That is what her parents, Lindy Chamberlain-Creighton and Michael Chamberlain, had maintained from the beginning.

The eyes of the parents welled with tears as the findings of the

Backstory

Tuesday's findings mirror those of the first coroner's inquest in 1981, which had also blamed a dingo in the disappearance of 9-week-old Azaria Chamberlain from her parents' tent in 1980.

But a second inquest a year later charged Lindy Chamberlain-Creighton, left, with murder and her husband with being an accessory. She was convicted in 1982 and served more than three years in prison before that decision was overturned. A third inquest in 1995 left the cause of death open. The case became famous internationally through the 1988 movie "A Cry in the Dark," in which Meryl Streep played the mother. (AP) was overturned. A third inquest in 1995 left the cause of death open. The case became famous internationally through the 1988 movie "A Cry in the Dark," in which Meryl Streep played the mother. (AP) fourth inquest into their daughter's disappearance were announced.

"We're relieved and delighted to come to the end of this saga," a tearful but smiling Chamberlain-Creighton, since divorced and remarried, told reporters.

The parents and the eldest of their three children, Aiden Chamberlain, 38, on Tuesday collected Azaria's new death certificate.

Many Australians initially did not believe that a dingo was strong enough to take away the baby, whose body has never been recovered. Public opinion swayed harshly against the couple; some even howled like dingoes outside her house.

No similar dingo attack had been documented at the time, but in recent years the wild dogs have been blamed for three fatal attacks on children. Few doubt the couple's story today, but the latest inquest — which the family fought to get — made it official that Azaria was killed in a dingo attack. (AP)

Egypt Revamps Constitution Panel

Cairo

Egypt's march to democracy hit another obstacle Tuesday when liberals boycotted a parliament session called to create a panel to draw up a new constitution, complaining that Islamists are trying to dominate the process.

A new constitution is key to Egypt's turbulent transition to democratic rule after decades of authoritarian regimes. Many Egyptians hope the new charter will curtail the powers enjoyed by their presidents and enshrine freedom of expression.

However, some fear that Islamists may want the document to inject more religion in government and restrict liberties. A court ruling disbanded a previous panel that was packed with Islamists.

The voting for the panel members went ahead without the estimated 60 lawmakers who walked out. Votes were being counted late Tuesday. (AP)

Diesel exhaust causes cancer, the World Health Organization said Tuesday, a ruling it said treats exhaust as a health threat on par with secondhand smoke. Demonstrators gather in Moscow Tuesday to march against President Putin.

Thousands Fill Moscow For Anti-Putin Protest

Moscow

Undeterred by a sudden escalation in the Kremlin's crackdown on the opposition, tens of thousands of Russians flooded Moscow's tree-lined boulevards Tuesday in the first mass protest against President Vladimir Putin since his inauguration in May.

Opposition leaders put the number of protesters at 120,000, while police estimated that about 20,000 showed up. The crowd appeared to be smaller than earlier anti-Putin demonstrations, which drew as many as 100,000 people, but the turnout was still impressive in a country where such protests only months ago had brought out no more than a few hundred people.

After tolerating the protests through the winter, Putin has taken a tougher stance since embarking on his third presidential term, including signing a repressive new bill last week that stiffens penalties for taking part in unauthorized rallies, including raising the fine for taking part in unauthorized protests 150-fold.

Police on Monday searched opposition leaders' apartments, carting off computers and cellphones. They also demanded that opposition leaders come in for questioning on Tuesday.

They were ordered to appear just an hour before the rally began, in what was widely seen as a crude attempt to scare away the protesters.

Police, who had clashed with protesters at the last mass anti-Putin protest, stood guard but took no action. The demonstration ended peacefully six hours after it had begun. (AP)

Verizon rolled out new phone plans Tuesday in what analysts called the industry's largest pricing change in 20 years.

Change Of Plans

Verizon's 'Share Everything' plans let consumers connect up to 10 devices to a single account

New York

Verizon Wireless, the nation's largest cell-phone company, is phasing out nearly all of its existing phone plans and replacing them with pricing schemes that encourage customers to connect their non-phone devices, such as tablets and PCs, to the Verizon network.

The revamped plans let families and other subscribers share a monthly data allowance over as many as 10 devices — the biggest overhaul in the price of wireless service since the cell phone became a mainstream device. The idea is likely to be copied quickly, at least by AT&T Inc., which has already said it is considering introducing shared-data plans soon.

Verizon's move "is the most profound change to pricing the telecom industry has seen in twenty years," said analyst Craig Moffett.

For Verizon, the approach reflects a desire to keep growing now that nearly every American already has a phone.

In the first quarter of this year, phone companies, for the first time, reported a drop in the number of phones on contract-based plans, which are the most lucrative.

To keep service revenues rising, companies are betting on increased data usage, and that means getting more data-hungry devices on their networks.

Verizon's new "Share Everything" plans, announced Tuesday, will become available June 28. They include unlimited phone calls and texts and will start at $90 per month for one smartphone and one gigabyte of data.

If used only with a smartphone, "Share Everything" prices are lower

Q&A

What type of customer should move to Verizon's new plan?

If you already have unlimited calling and texting plans, the new plans are likely to save you money, especially if you have a family plan. If you have a tablet, the new pricing scheme could be a good idea too.

What if I have an "unlimited data" plan? Can I keep it?

Yes. But Verizon will no longer let you move the plan to a new phone after June 28, unless you pay the full, unsubsidized price for that phone. For most smartphones that will add hundreds of dollars to the price. A subsidized Verizon iPhone 4s costs $200. The price you'll pay if you keep your unlimited plan: $650.

I don't need a fancy data plan. I just want a regular phone, with no frills. Are the calling-only plans going away?

Almost. There will be only one plan for basic phones. It costs $40 per month and gives you 700 minutes of calling. Texting and data will cost extra.

Is this the future? Are all phone plans going to be this way?

For its part, AT&T is likely to go in this direction as well. It makes sense for phone companies to meter only the data usage. They can easily provide unlimited texting and calling, but data usage stresses their network. They also want to get as many new, non-phone devices as possible on their networks, and, for customers, shared data plans are cheaper than putting each device on a new plan. (AP) than for current plans with unlimited calling and texting, but higher than plans with limited calling and texting.

The plans will push many subscribers toward spending more by including unlimited calling and texting by default. Unlimited calling plans provide peace of mind, but not many people need them, and the average number of minutes used is declining. Verizon's limited calling and texting plans will disappear, except for one $40-per-month plan intended for "dumb" phones.

From Verizon's perspective, offering unlimited access is an efficient use of its network, because calling and texting take up little capacity. Data usage, on the other hand, consumes a lot of network resources.

The savings will come to subscribers who add more devices to their plans. In such cases, the new pricing system will be cheaper compared with separate data plans for each device.

Under "Share Everything," Verizon will stop charging extra for letting devices act as "mobile Wi-Fi hotspots." That means subscribers with a smartphone could use it to connect a tablet to the Internet, without paying the extra $10 per month for a tablet.

Moffett sees the new plan as cementing the dominance of Verizon and the No. 2 carrier, AT&T. That's because the shared-data plan encourages a family to use devices from one company, rather than spreading out the bills.

"In a household with two or three AT&T or Verizon devices — say, a smartphone and a tablet or two, and one device from T-Mobile or Sprint ... Sprint doesn't stand a chance," Moffett said.

Verizon had telegraphed the move toward shared plans, but had not revealed details. PETER SVENSSON (AP)

Data Vampires

Under Verizon's new "Share Everything" plans, subscribers can stop worrying about monitoring calling minutes or text messages, but they'll have to keep an eye on data use. Here are some of the fastest ways to burn through your data allotment:

VIDEO

One hour of YouTube-quality video eats up 120 megabytes, or 12 percent of Verizon's cheapest new data plan, at 1 gigabyte per month.

AUDIO

The second biggest offender, and potentially more serious, since some people keep streaming audio on for hours. One hour a day of Pandora consumes nearly a gigabyte.

APPS

Apps vary greatly in size, but downloading them costs a lot of data.

PHOTOS

Shutterbugs can consume significant amounts of data, as sending and viewing photos both count toward the monthly limit. (AP)

Metro Ups Ante on Paper Cards

Higher surcharges for fare cards meant to boost SmarTrip use

Transportation

Metro is about to impose a bigger penalty on riders who use paper fare cards, so the transit authority also is announcing some incentives to switch to the electronic SmarTrip cards.

Right now, the surcharge for using a paper card is 25 cents, though Metro tends to frame it as a “discount” for using SmarTrip. Starting July 1, the date for all the fare changes, people who use the paper cards will pay $1 more for their regular fares than those using SmarTrip cards. Seniors and people with disabilities will be charged 50 cents more, because they get a discounted ride.

This was what the Metro board approved after first considering General Manager Richard Sarles’ proposal to go to a flat fare system for the paper cards, charging $6 for a peak ride and $4 off-peak.

For years, Metro has been waging a fairly successful campaign to shift riders from the paper cards to the rechargeable SmarTrip cards, which are easier for Metro to administer and generally easier for riders to use.

But charging $1 extra per ride just for choosing paper over plastic is a serious escalation of the campaign, so Metro is doing some things to make the transition easier.

Adding Value Online

People who register their SmarTrip cards can add value to them online, rather than having to do all their transactions at the station vending machines.

It’s also possible to add value to a senior card online.

What you can’t do online is buy a senior card. For that, seniors need to show a valid government-issued photo ID with proof of age at a Metro sales office, or at commuter stores, and some public libraries in Montgomery County. (This is a security measure, intended to block fraud.)

Transfer Change

Metro announced Monday that it is raising the limit on the value that riders can transfer from a paper card to a SmarTrip card at a fare vending machine. It had been $7. The new limit is $20. The limit was a fraud-prevention measure. (TWP)

Other Upgrades

As of July 1, riders will be able to load one-day rail passes and 28-day rail passes onto SmarTrip cards.

As of Sept. 1, Metro will offer $3 rebates to people who register their cards online. The card still will cost $5 to buy, but the $3 credit will be issued to the card five days after you first use it.

Starting this fall, riders who have online SmarTrip accounts will be able to set up an automatic reload for their cards, which kicks in whenever the balance drops below an amount they choose.

Group plans to hold ceremony ahead of departing McPherson

Washington

Members of Occupy D.C. plan on clearing out McPherson Square and throwing an official goodbye ceremony this weekend, organizers said Tuesday.

Protester Rooj Alwazir said the group met Sunday and decided to leave the square — where it had a skeletal presence for the past three months — for good this week. The group's library tent was taken down, and the books were moved to the group's new office space nearby, she said.

"It's sad, but it's a good move for us, so we can move on to other projects out in the community," Alwazir said.

attention to Occupy Our Homes, an affiliated movement to help defend homeowners facing eviction.

It was a quiet coda to one of the longest-running occupation sites in the country, which began noisily last October when protesters affiliated with the Occupy Wall Street movement took over the federally owned park in Northwest Washington. Dozens of protesters practically lived in the square for four months — prompting an outcry from neighbors and a congressional hearing — until a high-profile raid by U.S. Park Police cleared the encampment in early February.

The National Park Service allowed the protesters to maintain symbolic "vigil tents" in the square, so a small group remained until this week. Park Service workers had already cordoned off large swaths of the park this spring to renovate and reseed where the protesters had damaged $8,000 worth of sod installed in a $400,000 upgrade of the park completed with federal stimulus money in 2010.

No Contract Concerns at All

Redskins not worried about signing RGIII, 7 other draft picks

The Redskins

Washington Redskins quarterback Robert Griffin III and the seven other players taken with the first eight picks of the NFL Draft have yet to agree to their rookie contracts. But roughly six weeks before the start of training camp, Griffin said he isn't worried that slow negotiations will force him to hold out.

On Tuesday, Griffin and coach Mike Shanahan dismissed concerns that negotiations will drag on for a lengthy period of time.

"I don't worry about it. I don't think it's something that will be an issue," Griffin said. "I did talk to my agent last week and he said, 'Don't worry about it.' All I've got to do, I'm here to play football. We're going to make sure that happens."

The new collective bargaining agreement reached last year includes guidelines that base a rookie's pay on where he was selected in the draft, a system designed to help eliminate holdouts.

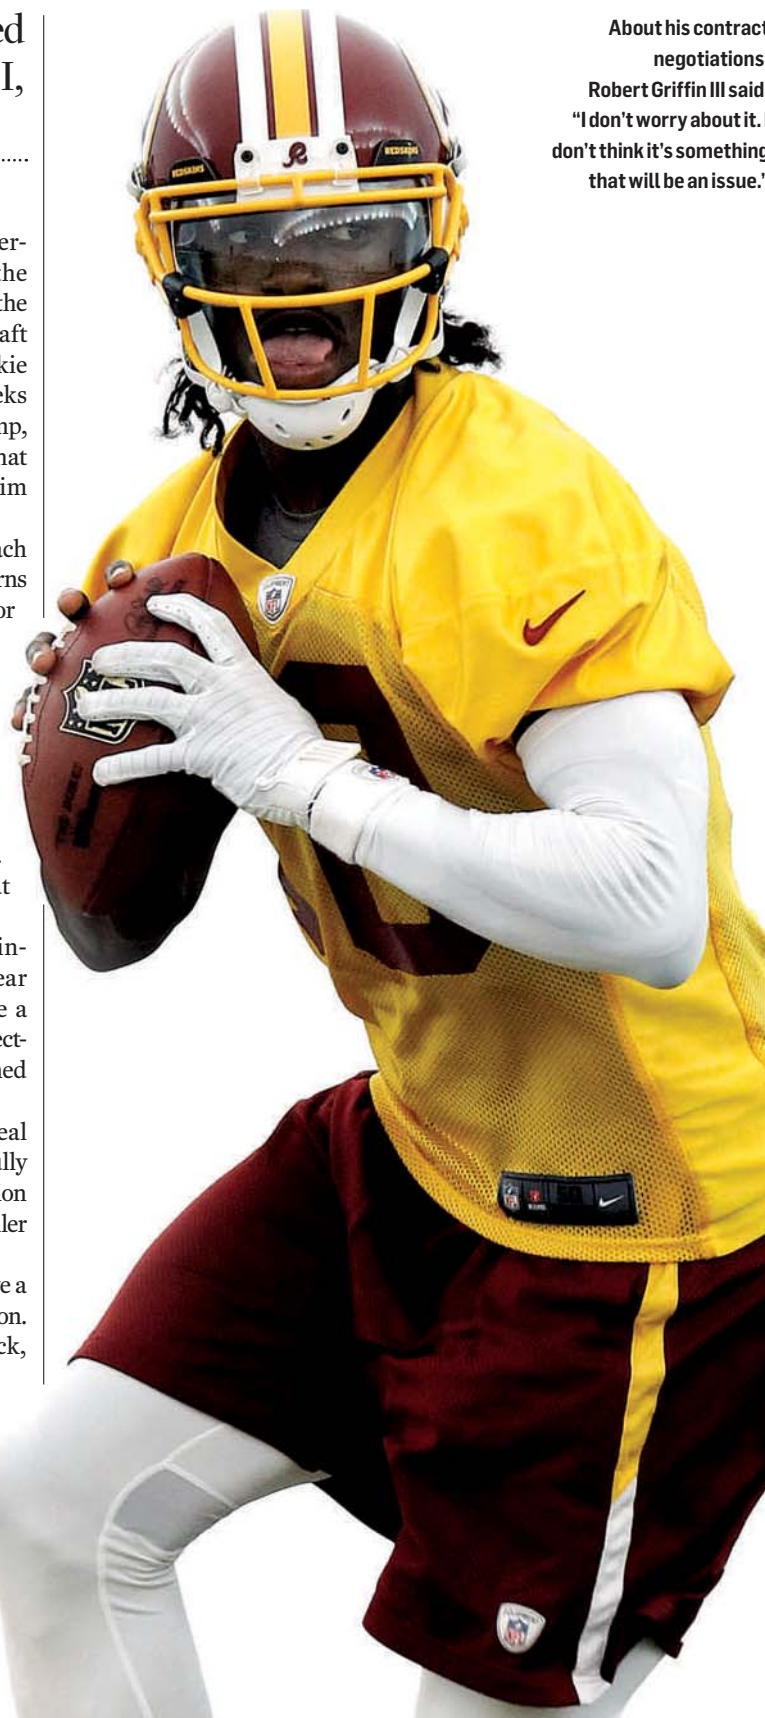

Griffin is likely to sign a deal that looks something like the fully guaranteed, four-year, $21 million contract that linebacker Von Miller signed with Denver in 2011.

And Griffin is likely to receive a signing bonus close to $14 million. It is believed that Andrew Luck, who remains in negotiations with the Indianapolis Colts, will sign a contract worth around $22 million.

Shanahan said he expects Luck's deal to have a domino effect on the rest of the top rookie contracts. He said Griffin hasn't allowed his contract status to cause any distractions.

"Those contracts will get done," Shanahan said, referring to the deals of Griffin and third-round guard Josh LeRibeus, who also has yet to sign. "Some of them just take a little longer than others, especially first round, second pick. Usually when the first guy gets signed, everything falls into order."

This is the final week at Redskins Park for Griffin and his teammates, at least for a while. Then comes a five-week break, followed by training camp in late July. Rookies will report for workouts July 16, Shanahan said, and veterans will return just more than a week later for the official start of training camp.

Griffin has found a home in Northern Virginia, but will be spending his break in Texas. He plans to get together with members of the Redskins' receiving corps off and on to continue developing their chemistry.

Griffin is allowed to work out at Redskins Park even if he hasn't signed, but will not be allowed to take the field for training camp until a deal is reached.

Move over, Lakers and Dodgers. Step aside, Trojans and Bruins. For now, hockey is King for LA fans.

Los Angeles got its first chance to celebrate a Stanley Cup on Monday night as people decked in black, purple and ear-to-ear grins partied outside Staples Center and across the city following the Kings' 6-1 victory over the New Jersey Devils in Game 6 to clinch the series.

Goaltender Jonathan Quick was awarded the Conn Smythe Trophy, given to the most valuable player of the playoffs.

"It's a hockey town now!" said Kings fan Kate Byrne Haltom, who has long been a hockey fan but didn't have much company in Southern California.

Lifelong Kings fan Andrew Gonzales, 21, was a bundle of tears and screams in the streets as he reveled with friends on Figueroa Street outside Staples on a night he thought might never come.

"It's been 14 years I've been a fan, I started when I was 6, I've been to over 200 games," said Gonzales. "It's the happiest day of my life. I could die. Yeeaaah!"

Despite hockey's bruising reputation, the celebrations stayed mostly peaceful, with virtually none of the violence and vandalism that has followed some Lakers' titles.

"Nothing got lit on fire, no cars got damaged, no vandalism that we know of, a couple of minor arrests, but really nothing you wouldn't expect," police Cmdr. Andrew Smith told reporters a few hours after the end of the game. "I think you could say the LAPD are big fans of the Kings fans."

Alan Dzagoev scored his third goal of the European Championship and Jakub Blaszczykowski equalized in the second half as Russia and Poland drew, 1-1, Tuesday.

Dzagoev darted past defender Lukasz Piszczek in the 37th minute and sent a glancing header beyond goalkeeper Przemyslaw Tyton after a curling free kick from Andrei Arshavin.

But Poland was rewarded for its attacking intent in the 57th when Blaszczykowski cut in from the right and sent a searing left-foot drive into the far corner of the goal.

The result left Russia at the top of Group A with four points but also kept alive Poland's chances of qualifying for the quarterfinals.

Earlier Tuesday, the Czechs played themselves back into Group A contention by scoring two early goals and hanging on to beat Greece 2-1, meaning all four teams can still qualify.

Petr Jiracek scored the first goal, beating Greece goalkeeper Costas Chalkias in the third minute after a pass from Tomas Hubischmann sliced through the Greek defense.

PHOTOS PROVIDED TO CHINA DAILY

EPISODE 1: GIFTS FROM NATURE

Climate and geographical differences lead to distinct eating habits and lifestyles. This episode focuses on the lives of families from the warm and humid seaside to the cold and dry grasslands, to demonstrate the different ways Chinese people reap food from nature.

EPISODE 2: STORY OF STAPLES

Staple foods are the main source of energy. From the natural grains of ancient times to the diverse offerings of today, staple foods have experienced significant evolution. This episode depicts how people from different areas process and prepare staple foods.

EPISODE 3: CONVERSION OF INSPIRATION

Chinese cuisine offers a variety of fermented delicacies, such as bean curd, yellow wine and pickled vegetables. To convert simple materials into beautiful food and drink requires the right timing and conditions. This is how "eating" inspires great wisdom.

In the week that it aired on national television from May 14 to 22, A Bite of China caused the ratings to spike like never before.

This seven-episode documentary was originally commissioned by China Central Television (CCTV) for its dedicated documentary channel, CCTV 9, and was mooted and produced by Channel 9's program director, Chen Xiaoqing. When the series debuted on CCTV 1, the station's main channel, there was an increase of 30 percent in viewer ratings, knocking off the drama serials that were normally aired in that prime-time slot.

According to Liu Wen, general supervisor of CCTV 9, A Bite of China was an instant hit, chalking up 2 million tweets on Sina Weibo. The ripple effect continued to spread as Web users went online to ferret out the various traditional foods and delicacies mentioned in each episode.

China's biggest online shopping portal Taobao.com said the number of searches for food at the site doubled when the program was shown at 10:30 pm. Furry bean curd, black truffles, matsutake mushrooms and organic ham from a little-known village in Yunnan province all became hot items.

Viewers marveled anew at traditional kitchen skills such as the slicing of soft bean curd into hair-like slivers and the making of pulled sugar candy. They also caught glimpses of the lives of farmers harvesting winter bamboo shoots, digging up lotus roots, rearing mitten crabs and diving for sea cucumbers and abalones.

Most of all, A Bite of China brought the Chinese back to their culinary roots, most of which has been forgotten in the urban rush.

Chen Xiaoqing, the lead director of the series, sums it up: The series has struck a chord close to Chinese hearts because food is not just about eating, it is about traditional habits, and historical heritage.

A seven-episode documentary on the country's favorite subject has stirred up a crest of culinary interest, including millions of blog entries and an increase in sales of regional snacks and traditional foods. Our team of writers spread out to take the pulse of the producers, directors, consultants and viewers of A Bite of China.

"Only the Chinese have such a variety of flavors, all reflected in their experiences in life," he said. "For example, they use the phrase 'to taste bitterness' when referring to hardship in life. Jealousy in a relationship is referred to as 'eating vinegar', and when a woman is bold and straightforward, she is described as a 'peppery personality'."

Chen is known among his friends as an eager gourmet and street food aficionado. It makes sense that he should propose the idea of a food and travel documentary early in 2011, after the CCTV documentary channel was established.

Chen's colleague, Liu Wen, says a major mission for the CCTV documentary channel is to introduce China to the world.

"We wanted to show an international audience what China is like, what modern China is like," he said.

The production team of 30 started shooting A Bite of China in March 2011, and finished a year later. To make sure the documentary stands up to international standards, it was the first time CCTV used high-resolution cameras and tricks that created an impressive visual impact.

But work started long before the actual filming. The enormous amount of homework meant plenty of research and consultation with food experts, historians and consultants, including Hong Kong-based gourmet writer Chua Lam, himself an ex-film maker, and Shanghai-based food critic Shen Hongfei. The two men were the chief consultants for the series.

Chen and his team made sure there were stories behind every beautiful, tempting image of food, incorporating ingredients, places and food producers that reflected geographical, historical, religious and anthropological relevance.

"It is our hope that the series can reflect the changes of Chinese food in history, and the impact of rapid changes in China on families and relationships," Chen said.

This is especially apparent in the second episode, Story of Staples. The cameras zoom in on an old couple who makes traditional rice cakes in the countryside of Ningbo, Zhejiang province. They only see their children once or twice a year because the second generation has deserted the land and opted to live in the city. The increasing number of empty nesters has become a significant social phenomenon in the country.

Another sign of encroaching urbanization can be seen in the seventh and final episode, Our Country, Our Fields. It shows the hanging garden of Beijinger Zhang Guichun, who carefully tends 100 square meters of vegetables on an apartment rooftop. In the city where land is scarce, Zhang and the like are trying their best to create an oasis among the concrete barrenness.

Dong Keping, a Beijing gourmet who was also consulted for the documentary, thinks the modern industrialization process and over-population have already resulted in the sacrifice of certain valuable resources, such as the traditional "three delicacies" — rare fish from the Yangtze River.

He thinks city dwellers have become nostalgic about the past, and food from the past, as they grow disillusioned with the present. Dong says the documentary is able to get so much resonance because it brings viewers back to a pure, clean memory of childhood food, food that is now lost in the urban sprawl and barely surviving in threatened pockets in the remote countryside.

The Chinese love their food, but they have been plagued

EPISODE 4: TASTE OF TIME

Salting, air-drying, pickling and freezing are the major ways Chinese preserve foods. These are also the methods that have produced a lot of time-honored delicacies, such as Jinhua ham and salted fish. This episode explores how the ancient wisdom influences food preservation technologies.

EPISODE 5: SECRETS IN THE KITCHEN

To reach perfection, every chef is like a magician, skillfully handling the basic boiling, steaming and stir-frying techniques. This episode goes into the kitchens of both ordinary people and master chefs to show how they handle the skills.

by a continuous series of food safety issues in recent years. Bian Jiang, deputy secretary-general of the China Cuisine Association, says the images of simple, honest traditional food producers serve as a contrast against the black sheep in the food industry.

"This may be a better way to awaken the conscience of those producers — by showing them the honest hard work involved in traditional foods."

Bian, another consultant for A Bite of China, says there has been much media coverage of food in recent years, contributing to a heightened awareness.

"But in the past, these programs mainly showed cooking techniques, cuisine styles and tempting food pictures. A Bite of China shows the source of Chinese culinary culture. It reaches beyond the tip of the tongue, into the

EPISODE 6: BLEND OF TASTES

Based on the five basic tastes of sour, sweet, bitter, spicy and salty, Chinese people always enjoy experimenting with different combinations. Going to about 10 different places that cover China's four major cooking styles, this episode shows how people are playing with the palate by using different seasoning techniques.

EPISODE 7: OUR COUNTRY, OUR FIELDS

The last episode leads audiences from dining tables into the fields, shifting their attention to the sources of food. This episode shows how different foods are grown, with a focus on the eco-friendly agricultural productions that guarantee both quality and safety.

different sectors of society."

A chef used to hover at the bottom rung of the social hierarchy. These days, the link between food and culture has helped elevate the chefs to better social standing, and respect.

Sam Leung, executive chef with Dynasty Seafood Restaurant in Vancouver, Canada, says Chinese culinary culture is the root of inspiration for Chinese chefs overseas.

"Helping Chinese chefs learn the culture behind the cuisine will boost Chinese food overseas, and lift the social status of Chinese chefs," he said. "It is my dream to let foreigners understand that Chinese cuisine can be artistic and beautiful."

A Hot New Series

"Burning Love," a new web series from Yahoo! Screen, takes everything that's unintentionally funny about the "The Bachelor" and amps up the ridiculousness. The series comes from the mind of Ken Marino, above, of the cult Starz series "Party Down." He plays Mark Orlando, a firefighter with an eighth-grade education who's looking for love. "Burning Love" is a faithful parody of the ABC dating show — right down to the way it's shot, the lavish mansion and the rose ceremony (or in this case, a hose ceremony). Michael Ian Black hosts, and thus far, the series is filled with Marino's famously funny friends. "Party Down" co-stars Adam Scott and Ryan Hansen have already appeared, and the single ladies vying for Mark's love are played by a host of female comics (along with actor Ken Jeong and one Hollywood starlet who spends the first episode in a panda suit.)

With new, eight-minute installments on Mondays and Thursdays, "Burning Love" shows that Yahoo!, which streamed Bill Maher's last comedy special, is a formidable player in the Internet video game. If it's a hit, Funny or Die and YouTube may need to watch their backs.

Watch episodes of "Burning Love" at Screen.yahoo.com/burning-love.

Former first lady Barbara Bush and former president George H.W. Bush talk with filmmakers during production of HBO's "41."

Roth doesn't pretend that Bush's four years as president (1989 to 1993) weren't the most important. But he finds rich stories in the other 84. Remarkably, the film contains footage of Bush's rescue when his plane was shot down in World War II. Bush also talks about his daughter, Robin, who died of leukemia at age 3 in 1953.

"He's not a braggadocio kind of guy. He doesn't want to ... talk about how wonderful he is."

Bush says in the film that the presidency "was the epitome of my life but not my whole life."

It was mildly surprising that Bush talked at all for "41." Bush doesn't grant many interviews and doesn't want to talk about politics, said film executive Jerry Weintraub, a family friend.

"He's not a braggadocio kind of guy," Weintraub said. "He doesn't want to sit around and talk about how wonderful he is."

That attitude — Bush even talked about violating "my dear mother's rule about not talking about yourself" — shaped the film.

Roth hoped for more interview time, but had to make do with what he had. Yet he recognized it was a special opportunity to make a film in Bush's own voice.

"He just wants to be a man who's enjoying the rest of his life," Roth said. "He doesn't really care too much about how history remembers him and that tends to reflect how he's not out there all that much." DAVID BAUDER (AP)

HBO's '41' gives a rare peek into the mind of former president George H.W. Bush

Documentary

Tourism officials in Maine will be delighted when they see HBO's new documentary on President George H.W. Bush.

The film has so many shots of waves splashing over the rocks at the Bush family compound in Kennebunkport that it's tempting to book a vacation nearby. The beauty of Walker Point and its rejuvenating qualities for Bush are key to understanding him, and key to filmmaker Jeffrey Roth's goals as a result. "It sort of became like another character because of his love for the place and his family, and his love for his boat," Roth said.

Granted unusual access to the former president, Roth set out to make "41" (the title a reference to Bush as the nation's 41st president) a personal rather than political film. It debuts Thursday, two days after Bush's 88th birthday.

Turning Points A Painful Loss

In the film, Bush comes across as a gentleman and an old school politician. One of the most fascinating passages, however, came when Bush was asked about his 1992 election opponent Ross Perot. "Can't talk about him," Bush said, his voice frosty. "Cost me the election and I don't like him. Other than that, I have nothing to say." (AP)

Pre-Fireworks Entertainment: Actor Matthew Broderick, country singer Josh Turner, composer John Williams, Kool & The Gang and a dozen U.S. Olympic athletes will be among the headliners for this year's July Fourth celebration on the National Mall. Broderick and Kelli O'Hara will perform songs from the Tony-winning Broadway musical "Nice Work If You Can Get It" during "A Capitol Fourth," organizers said Tuesday. (AP)

Rapper Waka Flocka Flame delivers a new round of fiery vocals

Album Review

Gallons of testosterone. Lots of shouting. Gratuitous violence that you'll only quarter-believe. Then some more shouting. Waka Flocka Flame's new album, "Triple F Life: Fans, Friends & Family," has all the big-dumb-bang-bang-razzle-dazzle of a Michael Bay blockbuster. Which means it's kinda awesome.

The Atlanta rapper crash-landed on our eardrums in 2010 with "Flockaveli," a roaring debut on which his roughest street narratives felt secondary to his pyrotechnic vocal delivery. The man had a way of making syllables explode from his mouth. His beats — many produced by Virginia wunderkind Lex Luger — sounded like orchestrated artillery fire.

"Triple F Life" softens a lot of those coarse edges, giving it the feel of a movie sequel aimed at drawing new fans to the franchise. Producers Luger and Southside provide the sonic kablooeey, while iffy duets with Flo Rida and B.o.B. steer the proceedings toward standard radio pop.

"Triple F Life" has the feel of a movie sequel aimed at drawing new fans to the franchise.

Still, Waka consistently makes for a great action hero. His vowels come coated in a thick Georgia drawl, and his consonants make ordinary words sound bigger than they are. When he plugs up the dead air in a verse with gunfire onomatopoeia (which he does incessantly), he doesn't use the word "pow." Instead, he replaces the p with a b. BOW! BOW! BOW! BOW! Sounds nastier, right?

BOWs! abound on "Lurkin" and "Let Dem Guns Blam," the album's two grimmest offerings. But don't try that same kind of tough talk on him. "Them tattoos and that jewelry don't make you hard," Waka raps on "U Ain't Bout That Life," brushing off the baddest of dudes.

Rhyme and meter are often casualties to his approach. Like Harlem rapper Juelz Santana a decade before him, he seems to relish elbowing his way out of the vocal patterns our ears are trained to anticipate. All the while, he serves as his own cheering section, constantly shouting in the background. FLEX! AY! WAKA! OKAY! FLOCKA! UH! UGH! UNNGGGH!

Two thumbs way up! A tour de blunt force! Four-and-a-half BOWs!

Album Review*An Uneven Effort On Potter's Latest

Idiosyncratic Vermont-based singer-songwriter Grace Potter's unlikely trajectory began in 2002 as part of the jam-band circuit and has gone on to include collaborations with artists as divergent as Kenny Chesney and the Black Keys. On her sixth release, "The Lion the Beast the Beat," Potter credibly tackles different sounds and genres but never latches on to one that seems distinctly her own.

The album showcases Potter's ability as a multi-instrumentalist and powerhouse singer while also hinting a bit too clearly at a desire for mainstream acceptance. Songs such as the headache-inducing title track, a '70s-rock-style amalgam, recalls war-horse acts like Heart at their worst. The mawkish "Stars" feels contrived for new country radio.

This persistent tension between grit and gloss renders Potter's work simultaneously intriguing and frustrating. TIMOTHY BRACY (FOR THE WASHINGTON POST)

Airfare deals are still within reach if you're willing to be flexible

Advice

To snag the best airfares, travelers need to be adventurous and willing to pick up at a moment's notice.

OK, now let's be realistic. Most people making summer travel plans need just that: plans. They get a week off, maybe two, and aren't going to spend hard-earned cash on a last-second whim.

But great deals are still within reach. "Airfares are high but there are pockets of cheap out there," says Seth Miller, an information technology consultant who writes a blog under the name The Wandering Aramean. Miller does his best to beat the system by connecting in strange cities, flying at off-hours and taking advantage of sales often offered when an airline adds a new destination.

Here are tips from Miller and other expert travelers on how to combat rising airfares.

Weekend Fares

When airlines don't fill planes for an upcoming weekend, they slash prices. Each Tuesday, they email offers for that coming weekend or the following one to fliers who have signed up online for the deal alerts. Travelers have to depart late Fri-

$431

The average cost of a round-trip domestic ticket this summer, an increase of 2.6 percent from last summer, according to Kayak.com day or anytime Saturday and come back Monday or Tuesday.

Flexible Dates

Looking to go to Paris for a week but don't care when? ITA Software's airfare search Matrix.ita-software.com provides a calendar of the lowest fares.

Just enter the departure and destination city — nearby airports can even be added — and then how many nights to spend there. It will find the cheapest prices for a month out from a given date. The length of the trip can even be a range.

Chase the Fare

Want to know the cheapest fares from a departure city to anywhere? Check out Kayak's explore tool (Kayak.com/explore). It allows travelers to search multiple airlines at once this way. Searches can be done for a particular month or for all of summer. The query can be narrowed by activity — beach, golf, gambling, skiing — or by continent.

Odd Connections

Fares to Hawaii might be steep, but connecting through another city could save a lot of money. Use AirfareWatchdog's "fares to a city search" (Airfarewatchdog.com/cheap-flights/to-a-city) to see whether there are any less-expensive indirect routes to your destination.

Instead of flying from, say, Boston to Honolulu, it could be a lot cheaper to book two separate tickets — the first between Boston and Houston and the second from there to Hawaii. SCOTT MAYEROWITZ (AP)

Social Savings

Airlines are experimenting with sales on Twitter. At the forefront is JetBlue, which tweets last-second fare sales and vacation package discounts from @JetBlueCheeps. Some deals apply to just a few seats and are gone within hours. Airlines announce special sales to those who "like" their Facebook pages and sites such as AirfareWatchdog offer fare-alert emails. There are also frequent fliers who search for and post cheap flights in online discussion boards. Two of the better discussion boards are: Flyertalk.com/forum/mileage-run-deals-372/ and Milepoint.com/forums/forums/mileage-runs-mattress-runs-travel-hacking.6/ (AP)

“[Justin Bieber] asked his fans to submit Girlfriend versions of ‘Boyfriend,’ and his favorites would be played during a television special toward the end of June. Our heroine’s response? Challenge accepted. She created a version of the song filled with the kind of lyrics that in any other context might have resulted in a restraining order, and her facial expressions could chill your soul. It was a masterpiece of parody.”

— Earnest at POPHANGOVER.COM loved the YouTube video titled “JBFanVideo” that stars a creepy-acting girl singing lyrics such as “If I was your girlfriend, I’d never let you leave, without a small recording device underneath your sleeve.”

“I don’t know about any of you guys but I think I’m more excited for the documentary on the Dream Team than the NBA finals.”

— @TDADDYNEAL is looking forward to the broadcast of NBA TV’s film, called “The Dream Team,” based on the men’s 1992 U.S. Olympic basketball team, set to air Wednesday at 9 p.m.

“There’s definitely room if GU wanted to be an ‘anchor tenant’ of [St. Elizabeths.] The city would probably be happy to make a deal with GU if it meant the construction of a top-notch hospital square in the middle of the city’s poorest ward.”

— Topher Mathews at GREATER-GREATERWASHINGTON.ORG ruminates where Georgetown University might try to expand, after the school announced it was looking to develop another 100 acres somewhere in D.C.

“Some sad news, everyone — after six years, nearly 24,000 posts, and roughly 7 trillion dogs doing specific things, Bestweekever.tv is officially going off the web. Or whatever the term for ‘a website ending’ is. ‘Askjeevesing?’ Sure.”

— Dan Hopper at BESTWEEK-EVER.TV eulogizes his blog, which will spend a week doing a series of wrap-up lists, before Friday, June 15, it’s last day of new content.

“My whole life is based on a lie! Joey Greco, how could you?!”

— Commenter Melissa at REALITYBLURRED.COM reacts to a story by Inside Edition confirming that not only is the reality show “Cheaters” staged, but so was an incident in which Greco, the show’s host, was stabbed during on an on-air confrontation on a boat that left him bloodied.

Horoscope

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You're in need of more assistance than is immediately available, but don't rush or you may make a few careless mistakes.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) What others require a good deal of teamwork and cooperation to accomplish, you may be able to get done on your own today — if the timing is right.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Slow and steady wins the race today; doing things in a hasty or careless fashion can only set you back — and perhaps cause you to lose recent gains.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Good manners can work wonders for you today, especially when you are asking favors of those who are not usually eager to offer them.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) You may not be fully prepared for what is in store today, but you may also be able to "learn by doing" better than most.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) You're seeking a new way of doing something that must be done every day. What you're after is actually in plain sight.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) It's time to take charge of a situation that has gone from bad to worse recently. You know exactly what must be done.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You can avoid the red tape and get something done with minimal fuss today. Someone in charge will be impressed by your ingenuity.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) You are perhaps the only one who can correctly interpret the clues that are set before you and others today.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) Your certainty may be the very thing that makes you vulnerable today. Don't make the mistake of thinking you can't be wrong!

ARIES (March 21-April 19) You're trying to keep up with someone or something, but you may not be cut out for the kind of chase that is in store. Rethink your position.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Others may not understand what drives you, but you are following your own rules at this time. Try to stay out of trouble!

SENTENCES

'Adult Film' and 'Lohan' Word Combo Thankfully Benign

Lindsay Lohan has landed a part in "The Canyons," a film written by novelist Bret Easton Ellis to be directed by Paul Schrader, several media outlets reported. "Shooting THE CANYONS starring James Deen and Lindsay Lohan: July 9-31 in L.A. Could not have dreamed of a better cast. Lindsay nailed it..." Ellis tweeted Monday. Co-star James Deen is an adult-film actor. (EXPRESS)

EMASCULATING!

Wife Laughs at Husband's Manhood-Enhancing Item

Tom Cruise kept his jeweled, dragon-shaped codpiece from "Rock of Ages" and brought it home for wife Katie Holmes to enjoy, he told E! News at the film's premiere Monday. "I wear it," Cruise said, adding that it makes Holmes laugh. Cruise said daughter Suri was scared of him in his costume, which involved eyeliner. (EXPRESS)

"Rock of Ages": "Hair" for a millennium that was doing just fine without "Hair."

When your man's showing more cleavage than you are, you have a problem.

THE SHEENIC ROUTE?

This Bodes Ill

Denise Richards and Richie Sambora have broken up, according to Us Weekly. The pair had dated in 2006 and 2007, then reunited this past fall. An early sign that the break-up had occurred came on Tuesday, on "Access Hollywood Live." When asked if she was dating, Richards said, "I'm friends with some very lovely men and everything's great!" One of those friends, she told Rolling Stone, is ex-husband Charlie Sheen: "He tells me everything." (EXPRESS)

RELATIONSHIPS

Best Friends Who Secretly Resent Each Other Forever!

David Arquette officially filed for divorce from Courteney Cox on Friday, citing irreconcilable differences, TMZ.com reported. He requested joint custody for their daughter, asked for no spousal support and is representing himself (no lawyer). The couple separated in October 2010 after about 11 years of marriage. (EXPRESS)
